Peanuts and Politics
New Exhibition at the Charles M. Schulz Museum
Mr. Schulz Goes to Washington
April 30 through December 4, 2016

(Santa Rosa, CA) In this election year a little laughter from the Peanuts Gang is in order. The lighter-side of politics and its intersection with the life of Charles Schulz is the focus of the newest exhibition, Mr. Schulz Goes to Washington, running April 30 through December 4, 2016 at the Charles M. Schulz Museum in Santa Rosa, California. This exhibition features original presidential-themed Peanuts comic strips, correspondence with several American presidents, and Peanuts memorabilia, including campaign bumper stickers, buttons, and banners. Visitors of all ages can cast a ballot for their favorite Peanuts character, or write a postcard to the future president.
Charles Schulz learned the value of service from his father, who was deeply connected in his community of St. Paul, Minnesota. Although Schulz often declined to state a party allegiance, he was very interested in politics and corresponded with many commanders-in-chief on both sides of the aisle. When later called upon to participate in different presidential initiatives, he willingly offered his cast of characters to promote topics that varied from the space race to physical fitness.

Although his Peanuts characters did not comment on real-world politics, Schulz slyly incorporated well-timed humor that readers could interpret in their own different ways. Schulz counted many American presidents among his fans, and a number of them wrote him letters of gratitude and appreciation for creating a beloved American cartoon. He corresponded personally with Presidents Nixon, Ford, Carter, Reagan, and Clinton.

Schulz and Ronald Reagan became friends in 1967 after the Reagans invited Schulz and his first wife Joyce for lunch at the Governor’s Mansion in Sacramento. As Ronald Reagan was in the midst of a campaign for the presidency in the summer of 1980, he replied to a friendly note from Schulz about “the new candidate in the race.” This of course, refers to Snoopy. Reagan ended the letter with, “Anything you can do to talk Snoopy out of running will be appreciated. How would he feel about a cabinet post?”

One Snoopy Lane
Santa Rosa, CA.

Dear Charles:

How good it was to hear from you after much too long a time. The new candidate in the race will certainly keep me from being over confident. If I’d only known of his political ambitions, I might have persuaded him to run on the ticket with me as Vice President.

The little cartoon strip I’ve enclosed belongs to our housekeeper, Anne. And she has prevailed upon me to ask if you would autograph it for her. She has kept it all these years -- 30 of them.

One of these days, with all the traveling we are doing, I hope that our paths will cross again. It’s been too long.

Nancy sends her best, as do I. Skipper, who now insists he has outgrown that name, is in New York, but I know he’ll be pleased to know you remembered him.

Anything you can do to talk Snoopy out of running will be appreciated. How would he feel about a cabinet post?

Best regards.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN

President Bill Clinton sent his best wishes to Charles Schulz on December 22, 1999 regarding Schulz’s upcoming retirement.

In the election years of 1960, 1964, and 1968, the Peanuts characters became involved in presidential storylines, sometimes disguised as classroom politics. The quirky personalities of the Peanuts Gang provided a backdrop for their political ambitions. Charlie Brown dreamed of what it would actually be like if he were elected president, but Lucy laughed in his face at that idea. In 1960 Lucy considers herself in the role of First Lady, but then says, “Why should I settle for being First Lady? Why shouldn’t I be president myself?” Linus promised that “Any little dog who happens to wander onto the playground will not be chased away, but will be welcomed with open arms!” and Pig Pen cleaned himself up for his candidacy by simply taking old candy wrappers out of his pockets.

In 1968, fans across America adopted a widespread ‘Snoopy for President,’ campaign, which was a welcome and lighthearted departure from the tumultuous politics of that era. In a 14-day series, Snoopy joins demonstrating birds and carries his own sign for “Paw Power,” a direct take-off of the Flower Power and Black Power ideologies of that same period.
